Report Releases: February 18–21, 2025

National Association of Home Builders (NAHB) Housing Market Index:
February (Tuesday)

Home builder sentiment dropped sharply as high mortgage rates and concerns over tariffs affected home builder confidence.

- Expected/prior month sentiment: 47/46
- Actual sentiment: 42

Housing Starts and Building Permits:
January (Wednesday)

Housing starts and building permits were mixed last month; starts fell and permits rose modestly.

- Expected/prior month housing starts monthly change: -7.3%/+16.1%
- Actual housing starts monthly change: -9.8%
- Expected/prior month building permits monthly change: -1.5%/-0.7%
- Actual building permits monthly change: +0.1%

Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) Meeting Minutes:
January (Wednesday)

Minutes from the Federal Reserve’s (Fed’s) January FOMC meeting showed that central bankers viewed the risks to inflation and the job market as roughly balanced, signaling a potentially lengthy pause before further rate adjustments.

Existing Home Sales:
January (Friday)

Existing home sales fell more than expected to start the year, due in part to high mortgage rates.

- Expected/prior month existing home sales monthly change: -2.6%/+2.9%
- Actual existing home sales monthly change: -4.9%

>> The Takeaway

- Housing data was notably weak, with home builder sentiment, housing starts, and existing home sales surprising to the downside.
- Softening housing data may be welcomed by the Fed as it tries to tamp down inflation. This was reflected in January’s FOMC minutes, which signaled a potentially lengthy pause in rate cuts.

Markets took a risk-off approach on the heels of disappointing economic data and hotter inflation. Soft economic data was seen in the NAHB Housing Market Index, which surprised to the downside, and softer-than-expected existing home sales. Additional concerns surfaced as Walmart issued softer-than-expected guidance for 2025, leading to ripples through the consumer discretionary and staples sectors.

Treasury yields, particularly short-to-intermediate-term maturities, moved lower. The 2-year yield fell 7 basis points (bps), closing at 4.19 percent. The 5- and 10-year yields also fell 7 bps, closing at 4.26 percent and 4.42 percent, respectively. The bond market seemed to reflect risk-off sentiment and uncertainty around short-to-intermediate-term economic growth.

>> The Takeaway

- Soft economic data and weak guidance from Walmart led equities lower.
- Short-to-intermediate-term bonds saw buying amid uncertainty around economic growth.

Looking Ahead

Economic data releases this week will cover consumer confidence, durable goods, and personal income and spending.

- On Tuesday, we expect the Conference Board Consumer Confidence Index for February. Confidence is set to fall, which would mark three consecutive months with worsening sentiment.
- On Thursday, we anticipate the second release of fourth-quarter GDP and preliminary durable goods orders data for January. GDP is expected to remain at 2.3 percent. Headline and core durable goods orders are set to show solid growth.
- Finally, on Friday, personal income and personal spending data for January will be released. Both are expected to rise, albeit at a slower pace compared with December.
